

Chicago, IL – August, 2012

Prospect City announced it has been engaged by The Brickman Group to provide pipelining for its senior talent during a critical period of change. Prospect City will be leading multiple senior level pipelines in an effort to add multiple executives over the next four months, a key phase of its new strategy.

In addition to recruitment, a continuous talent scan will support succession planning, and benchmarking. Prospect City will provide its database technology to support Brickman leadership and the Prospect City team.

“Pipelining has become a popular alternative for clients who want to approach talent benchmarking as a continuous relationship manager among highly qualified market talent, recruiters and corporate management”, added Robert Stein, President of Prospect City. “It’s a win-win-win for our clients and tracked market talent looking for exposure.”

Prospect City is an infrastructure services and intelligence provider to corporate leaders. The company leverages relationships and a strong recruitment team to provide pipelining services to corporate.

The Brickman Group offers landscape design and maintenance services for college campuses, municipal properties, sports facilities, and retail establishments. It provides sports turf services such as field design and consulting, irrigation, mowing, and field maintenance for MLB and the Olympic Games. Serving thousands of clients, the company has also taken on such special projects as repairing New Orleans City Park's irrigation system after Hurricane Katrina. Founded in 1939 by Theodore Brickman, the group has more than 11,000 employees, 160 branch offices in about 30 US states. Private equity firm Leonard Green & Partners owns a majority shareholding of the company.
